PUBLISHED REPORT

The Supreme Court has fired a sharp salvo at an all-too-common nuisance in civil litigation: endless pleadings that sprawl, meander, and drag everyone—judges included—into a quagmire of excess verbiage. Even worse? The creeping infiltration of AI-generated statements masquerading as human precision. The bench didn’t mince words. “Every word that is not a help is a hindrance,” it said, calling out the growing tendency to bury courts under heaps of repetitive,...
