Supreme Court Shuts Door on Late Service Claims

“No Resetting the Clock by Filing Last-Minute Appeals”

Sheikh Rayees • April 26, 2025

PUBLISHED REPORT

In a sharp reminder to government employees, the Supreme Court ruled that once the clock runs out on a service dispute, it cannot be wound back simply by filing a delayed grievance. A belated representation, the Court said, doesn't magically revive a dead claim. The bench made it crystal clear: when a public servant is denied a benefit—especially one not communicated by formal order—the responsibility falls on them to act...
