SUPREME COURT

Supreme Court Upholds Trial Court's Role in Specific Performance Cases, Even After Appellate Decree

Sheikh Rayees • September 6, 2024

PUBLISHED REPORT

In a significant ruling, the Supreme Court reaffirmed that an application under Section 28 of the Specific Relief Act, 1963, can be filed in the trial court, even if the decree for specific performance was issued by an appellate court. This decision underscores the broad interpretation of Section 28, ensuring that the trial court remains a crucial player in execution matters, regardless of the appellate court's involvement. Citing past rulings,...
