When Laws Lose Their Way, Courts Must Step In

Supreme Court Calls for Legislative Performance Audits

Sheikh Rayees • May 3, 2025

PUBLISHED REPORT

In a striking reaffirmation of the judiciary's role as more than a passive observer, the Supreme Court has declared that courts are not only empowered—but obligated—to nudge the executive into reviewing how well laws are working in the real world. When a statute begins to gather dust in bureaucratic corridors or stumbles under its own weight, courts can—and should—demand an audit of its impact. The top court clarified that this...
